Watch a video review, or view the guide.If you can't afford a new version, you can, of course, take your MKV files and other media that Apple TV will play to older Apple TV models, but they won't play back as well because the earlier models didn't have the same hardware as the new Apple TV. It's about the same as paying to upgrade your PC or Mac to run the latest OS version — it's more of a just want than an actual need. Apple's strategy of not fully supporting older hardware and not charging a lot for newer hardware that's more capable of playing newer formats and apps is good business — it doesn't cannibalize sales of its own hardware and allows it to bring a significantly reduced price to newer models, but it's not good for people who want to watch and listen to everything at home on as many devices as possible. It's not just video or TV that Apple is ignoring Although Apple has been an early leader in developing a diverse range of devices that can play movies, TV shows, music, and podcasts, it also already quietly supports lots of other formats, including many of those created by other makers. But in the fall, Apple 570a42141b
