A New CCR5 Delta32 Insufficiently Heterozygous Is Associated with Protection from HIV. The HIV-1 vaccine candidate CCR5 Delta32 mutant is perfectly homozygous in Caucasian populations, but only partially heterozygous in Japanese and African populations. However, the protective effect of the CCR5 Delta32 mutation has not been evaluated in a Japanese population. Therefore, we investigated the protective effects of CCR5 Delta32 in Japanese. This case-control study enrolled 40 cases and matched 90 controls among the participants of one of the annual survey in Sagamihara, Japan. In association analyses between CCR5 Delta32 and HIV infection, sex, virus subtype, mother to child transmission, and transmission via homosexual contact were not significant ($P > 0.05$). However, the CCR5 Delta32 heterozygous was significantly less frequent in cases than in controls ($P = 0.04$), even after adjusting for age, partner number, and condom use ($P = 0.01$). CCR5 Delta32 heterozygosity is unlikely to protect against HIV infection in Japanese, even after adjusting for confounding factors. Antigenic composition of primary and metastatic cells in rat.
