It will be a time of building a new house, and a new life. It will be a time for the beginning of a new beginning for our country. It will be a great day of celebration for all of us.” — Governor Bill Haslam’s prepared remarks as he signed the resolution that declared the day to be Nashville’s annual Hero Day I think that he should have kicked it off with the County Fair, and everyone should have gotten a t-shirt (or two) when they walked in! What a great day for everyone! It is time to declare our magnificent country a hero. A country that is the least taxed country in the industrialized world. A country that is a champion of capitalism, individual freedom, and a leader in the global market. A country that leads the world with human rights, and the right of states to have and maintain a militia. A country that is not bound by a Federal government that is responsible to the citizens of the United States. “For though, indeed, it is not our fate, as it was prophesied by this man, whether the whole of our children shall be virtuous, and our country happy and glorious, yet as, indeed, it is a fate we know not of, so it is not our great sin, but our great salvation, that our country shall not necessarily turn out thus; that, as the time of God's grace is not clearer, so the time of man's devil is not yet gone, and that there is yet a tear in the eye of things.” — Washington Irving, "Salamanca" James K. Polk was born near New London, Tennessee on September 14, 1795. Polk was the first Governor of Tennessee, the 21st President of the United States, the 11th Secretary of State, Secretary of War, and the 4th and 9th Vice President. I just found this old photo from 1943 of a group of children at the corner of Trigg Road and Creekbottom
