Most of the day, a DJ has various options in front of him or her, from the traditional deck to computer integration. I've tried my hand at making my own software apps, but it's not my strong suit. That said, I wanted a piece of the action. I started looking at my options and started considering DJMidi as one of them. As a software solution, DJMidi is a fair contender. It covers a wide range of DJ options and features, as well as permits you to port your mixes over to an iOS mobile device. The price is right, at $59.95, but there is a free trial available. I signed up for that.

From there, I started downloading the app and set my first hands on DJMidi. In short, DJMidi is a robust solution and will do for the DJ on a budget. The app covers a very long list of capabilities, including a DJ board with effects, audio tracks, playlists and cross tracks. It also comes with various DJ tools and features, all the while being fairly easy to navigate. There is something that is missing, however, and that is the ability to DJ.

Yes, there is an option to support another software and DJMidi has crossplay software available, but it doesn't appear to be active. This was not an issue when DJMidi was a free trial, so I am not sure if it has been updated recently or if it just has not been updated yet. Software's

Toronto police are investigating after a fight on a downtown streetcar left a man with a broken jaw, broken teeth and a broken nose. The fight happened at around 10 p.m. on a King streetcar heading east along Bloor St. W. from Queens Quay to Union Station. One man was sitting on the inside of the streetcar when the fight broke out, according to police. Witnesses said the altercation between the two men began after a dispute over a cellphone. A woman came to the streetcar's rescue, and stood in between the men as they scuffled. She was not injured. The police say that one man was taken to hospital after the brawl and has since been released. He has not yet been charged. Police are investigating and look for anyone else who may have witnessed the fight.
